7.1.4 An inclusive environment for everyone with tolerance and peace towards diversity in cultural, regional, linguistic, economic, and other ways is provided by the institution. The college organizes a variety of sports and cultural events to encourage cooperation among its students. In addition to other local festivities like Sankranti, the college observes commemorative days like Women's Day, Yoga Day, Cancer Day, and Leprosy Day. People from various racial and cultural backgrounds are able to interact positively as a result of this.

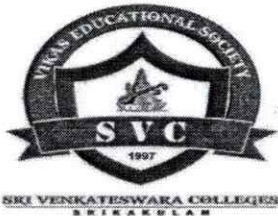

There is an institute-wide code of ethics that all students, teachers, and other staff members are required to abide by, regardless of their cultural, geographical, linguistic, communal, social, or other differences.

Students from all castes, creeds, religions, and geographical regions are given equal opportunities to engage in the many events that are held. The college features a National Service Wing to foster a sense of cohesion, order, and harmony. The NSS unit's initiatives at our institution help to lessen the effects of socioeconomic diversity and move people closer to living tolerantly and in harmony.

Maintaining tolerance and harmony among students is made possible in large part by the anti-ragging cell. Since the cell's creation, there has not been a single instance of ragging reported, demonstrating its effective operation. To promote unity in the college, a grievances redressal committee is also established to resolve student grievances.

In order to preserve the memories and provide students and staff with a sense of purpose and significance, SVCP celebrates national and international commemoration days and events. Days like this serve as a timely reminder to honor the accomplishments of our forefathers. The following days are among those observed at the institute:

International Youth Day: International Youth Day (IYD) is observed annually on August 12. The Department of Pharmacy takes the initiative and plans a variety of events, including debates, elocution competitions, essay contests, and other activities in which the students enthusiastically take part.
